Not illustrated. 1893 Excerpt: .in this course is given with the aid of a text-book, especial attention being paid to the solution of practical problems. The course involves the flow of water through orifices, pipes and canals, and over weirs, the calculation of sizes of pipes and conduits to convey given discharges, the construction of dams, reservoir walls, etc. Water power and water motors are discussed at length. Merriman's Treatise on Hydraulics is used as a text-book. In this course are also considered briefly materials--stone, cement, concrete, brick, their properties and general qualities, mode of preparation, and their combinations in construction; structures--masonry construction, theory and practical building of retaining walls, foundations, etc. Students taking this course must have passed in the preceding course in Mathematics. MINING. PROFESSOR DENTON. Second Year.--Winter Term, two hours a week; Spring Term, four weeks. The course consists of a series of lectures illustrated by diagrams, photographs, and sketches. The students may make full notes of these lectures, and are required to recite upon them at short intervals. The work is arranged to cover, as thoroughly as the time allotted will permit, the various operations that are necessary in mining enterprises. The following outline of subjects will give an idea of the ground covered. 1st. Surface Excavation: Determination of the amount and character of the material to be removed, methods of excavation, comparative cost and economy of different methods of removing excavated material. 2nd. Explosives: Gunpowder; constituents, manufacture, properties. Higher explosives; constituents, manufacture, properties, precautions...
